Where there are flowers there is beauty and beyond beauty there is hope.

Flowers in the City say that businesses care about their environment. Flowers in the City say that despite the current difficulties, there is a commitment to keep the City looking fresh and ready for business. Flowers in the City unites everyone who works, lives in or visits the City.

The City shows its pride in itself in many ways, not least its street scene. It is this effort, so successful over the past few years, when matched by property owners participating in the equally successful Flowers in the City programme that really brings the City to life.

This is now the sixtieth year of Flowers in the City. Beginning as the City Window Box Competition, it evolved soon after into the Campaign we know and it is high time we thanked all those who make it happen year in and year out: the Worshipful Company of Gardeners, its Master, Wardens and Court of Assistants, the Chairman of the Campaign, Edward Wright, its hard working Hon Secretary, Mrs Marjorie Dowbiggin and the judges who prowl their precincts quarterly, noting the best. We honour them all.

And all our congratulations to everyone who participates. Through this campaign, London really is the flower of them all.

Alderman Ian Luder
The Rt Hon The Lord Mayor of the City of London
